

Firearm-related injuries and deaths in the United States are a public health crisis. HHS remains committed to reducing the number of firearm-related injuries and deaths. As with other public health challenges, that means openly acknowledging the scope of the problem, updating the public on what weâ€™re doing to reduce firearm-related injuries and deaths, and providing the most up-to-date available guidance to help the broader public navigate the crisis.

Reference

Traumatic Brain Injury: A Roadmap for Accelerating Progress \(Consensus Study Report\)

Research Administration and Management